Archival snapshot of entire looseleaf Code of Massachusetts Regulations held by the Social Law Library of Massachusetts as of January 2020. 1925- includes measures of the National Assembly of the Church of England which have received royal assent. Local Government Act, 1999 The United States Government Printing Office (GPO) was created in June 1860, and is an agency of the the U.S. federal government based in Washington D.C. The office prints documents produced by and for the federal government, including Congress, the Supreme Court, the Executive Office of the President and other executive departments, and independent agencies. The Code of Federal Regulations is a codification of the general and permanent rules published in the Federal Register by the Executive departments and agencies of the Federal Government. The Code is divided into 50 titles which represent broad areas subject to Federal regulation. Each title is divided into chapters which usually bear the name of the issuing agency. Each chapter is further subdivided into parts covering specific regulatory areas. This is one of those documents. 111482-83, 111486-87, 111719-20, 111721-22, 111723-24, 111725-26 Published during the bicentennial of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland, one of the most distinguished medical associations in the United States, Medicine in Maryland will be of interest to citizens of the state, physicians, and medical historians."--BOOK JACKET. Also available as an e-book Chance, Order, Change: The Course of International Law, General Course on Public International Law by J. Crawford The course of international law over time needs to be understood if international law is to be understood. This work aims to provide such an understanding. It is directed not at topics or subject headings — sources, treaties, states, human rights and so on — but at some of the key unresolved problems of the discipline. Unresolved, they call into question its status as a discipline. Is international law “law” properly so-called ? In what respects is it systematic ? Does it — can it — respect the rule of law ? These problems can be resolved, or at least reduced, by an imaginative reading of our shared practices and our increasingly shared history, with an emphasis on process. In this sense the practice of the institutions of international law is to be understood as the law itself. They are in a dialectical relationship with the law, shaping it and being shaped by it. This is explained by reference to actual cases and examples, providing a course of international law in some standard sense as well. On October 5, 1999, Congress passed Public Law 106-65, National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000, Section 363, "Report on Inventory and Control of Military Equipment." The law required the Secretary of Defense to submit a one-time report, by Military Department, addressing the inventory and control of military equipment. The Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives were to receive the reports by August 31, 2000. The report was to address the military equipment status as of the end of fiscal year 1999. Public Law 106-65 required the Inspector General, Department of Defense, to review the report submitted to the committees and submit any comments considered appropriate by November 30, 2000. DoD actually issued the report on March 6, 2001, based on reporting for FY 2000 instead of FY 1999. The report identified 643,254 military equipment assets. These assets have an estimated value of about $700 billion. Policymakers and program managers are continually seeking ways to improve accountability in achieving an entity's mission. A key factor in improving accountability in achieving an entity's mission is to implement an effective internal control system. An effective internal control system helps an entity adapt to shifting environments, evolving demands, changing risks, and new priorities. As programs change and entities strive to improve operational processes and implement new technology, management continually evaluates its internal control system so that it is effective and updated when necessary. Section 3512 (c) and (d) of Title 31 of the United States Code (commonly known as the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act (FMFIA)) requires the Comptroller General to issue standards for internal control in the federal government. Summarizes the most significant, controversial, or far-reaching acts enacted by the General Assembly in 1999.
